The Journal of Charles Rawn

February 6, 1833 to May 27, 1833 (Book 4)

Edited by Sheila A. Rohrer

Introduction

During this period of his life, Charles Rawn was recently embarked on a career as a lawyer, and he was also making plans for his upcoming marriage to Frances P.

Clendenin. Although he never writes openly about his feelings, courtship, or engagement to Frances, there are hints throughout the journal. Almost every evening is spent at Mrs. Clendenin's, his future mother-in-law, and with Frances, or F.P.C., as she is called in his diary. When Rawn wrote on 12 February 1833 that he "was at party at Miss Briggs this evening F.P.C. not there," he was implying his disappointment.

Preparations for the upcoming nuptials can also be found sprinkled among Rawn's daily business and social recordings. On 28 March 1833, Rawn paid a Mr. McCulloh $5.00 for a "Box and Finger Ring" brought from Philadelphia which he later presented to Frances. A borrowed "Traveling Trunk" on May 3rd was apparently used for a trip to Philadelphia in which Rawn combined business and personal matters. On May 5th, Rawn left Harrisburg by stagecoach and arrived in Lancaster where he asked his good friend Jonathan King Findlay "to act as groomsman at [his] wedding on the 25th May inst." During his two week trip, Rawn visited relatives in West Chester, Thornbury, and Philadelphia and extended invitations to his upcoming wedding.

Although Rawn conducted business while in Philadelphia, the main purpose of his trip seemed to be the purchase of a "wedding suit" made of "blue cloth," "wedding boots,” “wedding stockings,” and “wedding gloves.” Rawn returned on the 19th of May, and he married Frances P. Clendenin on the 25th at DeWitts Presbyterian Church on a “cold & raw” rainy May evening. Typical of Rawn’s style, he does not make any emotional declaration, but he simply writes on May 26, 1833, “Clear & Beautiful. Spent day with Frances (my Wife).” This same entry reveals the relationship of James Peacock, the oft-mentioned postmaster, as an uncle of Frances Clendenen. This would help explain the frequency of Peacock’s name in Rawn’s journals, and it reveals why “Peacock’s” would be an important gathering place for Rawn and his social circle.

Rawn led a very active social life, and he frequently attended teas, parties, and dances. In addition, Rawn went to church every Sunday, usually DeWitts Presbyterian Church; however, he also mentioned going to Miles’ Church, Zacharias’ Church, Stern’s Church, and the Unitarian Church. In the company of men, Rawn liked to go horse-back riding, visit taverns, drink alcoholic beverages, and smoke cigars. However, one of Rawn’s favorite activities during the winter months was the “elegant” and “fine” sleighing parties that included both sexes. In one interesting passage on February 21, 1833, Rawn was at a social gathering where “cards were introduced’ but were “soon closed” because “Mrs White,” the innkeeper, did not approve. When Rawn wrote that the card game was “the first of this kind that I have been since I came to Harrisburg,” I believe he is revealing the conservative nature of Harrisburg at that time.

Coming from a more cosmopolitan area, Delaware County, I can imagine Rawn was exposed to a diverse array of social activities and probably made quite a fashionable figure at these gatherings. According to Egle, Rawn as “six feet high and of good address,”<sup>1</sup> and he seems to have been concerned about his appearance as his journal entries include the purchase of a black frock coat, silk stockings, and dancing pumps. No detail of his dress escaped his attention, and on May 23, 1833, he bemoaned the loss of a “handsome and new pair of gloves” that “made [him] dang mad.” This is one of the rare instances where Rawn actually expressed feeling in his writing.

For example, Rawn wrote about a disagreement he had with a man named R. Shannon that eventually led to his resignation from the Harrisburg Greys. Apparently Shannon, a fellow member of the Harrisburg Greys, was also a frequent visitor to Mrs. Clendenen’s house. Shannon’s presence at “Mrs. C’s” caused Rawn, on 7 February 1833 to call Shannon a “damn rascal, Liar & other hard names.” Rawn also “threatened to flay him” and challenged him to a duel which Shannon declined. The whole situation exploded on April 6, 1833, when Rawn addressed the Harrisburg Greys in a speech and declared that certain members were two-faced liars. According to Rawn, Shannon could not “bear this pinching of the shoe [and] charged bayonet on me within 3 feet of my breast.” Rawn reacted by “leisurely” picking up his sword causing the “coward” to draw back. Rawn marched in the parade that day; however, he quit the company with “much satisfaction.” One observer wrote that Rawn, “in controversy was the last to yield,”<sup>2</sup> and I believe Rawn’s actions in this situation depict a proud man with a fiery temper.

Rawn also revealed a spiritual nature when he wrote about the death of Frances’ close friend, Sarah Ann Weidman, whose “soul has this morning winged away its flight from friends & companions to the bosom of her God.” In an entry dated April 29, 1833, Rawn expressed his sorrow and belief that God’s promise of an afterlife was given to “enable us so to live that we may be calmly resigned to die.” Rawn’s grief must have been great for him to write in such an unusually introspective manner.

Aside from a glimpse into the personal life of Rawn, his diary also provides an opportunity to see the “current events” of Rawn’s time and how they affected him. One of the most important developments in the early nineteenth century in Harrisburg was the construction of the canals. Rawn often walked to the Canal and corresponded with Jonathan Mitchell, the Canal Commissioner. In March, 1824, the Pennsylvania Legislature authorized the governor to create a commission to oversee the construction of a “leading uninterrupted canal” to extend across the entire state.<sup>3</sup> By 1827 the Union Canal was opened between Middletown and Reading and central Pennsylvania had a water link to Philadelphia. The famous “Penn Lock,” near the capitol, was also built in 1827, and in March 1828, the canal was filled with water as far as Harrisburg connecting the city to the outside world.<sup>4</sup>

Although Rawn does not talk about politics in this journal, he makes frequent reference to the Anti-Masonic State Convention meeting at the courthouse. The “Anti-Masonic” movement that developed in the early nineteenth century was a reaction to the Free Masons. The Free Masons, a fraternal organization of wealthy men who cloaked themselves in secrecy and ritual, were powerful figures in politics, finance, and society. To the ordinary person, the Masons represented an aristocracy composed of the idle rich, and a political movement developed to get Masons out of influential positions.<sup>5</sup>

Harrisburg became a central area of the “Anti-Masonic” movement, and the gubernatorial election of 1835 was merely a contest between the friends and enemies of the Masons.<sup>6</sup>

Rawn’s involvement as an advocate against the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 may have been an issue with Rawn for years. In an entry dated February 28, 1833, Rawn corresponded with R.L. Wheatley of Louisville, Kentucky, “upon the subject of confinement of Henry Waggoner Negro in jail in that place.” Although Rawn may have been against human slavery, Egle wrote that he was a Democrat and “decidedly opposed to abolition, alleging a fear of a servile war of blacks against whites, but when the war began he was decided for the Union.”<sup>7</sup> Rawn would not have been alone in his ambivalent feelings about the abolition of slavery, and like many others, the Civil War may have forced him to take a committed stand.

My transcription ends with Rawn’s marriage to Frances Clendenin and marks the beginning of a new stage in Rawn’s life.

Sarah Ann Weidman died this morning after 3 hours severe suffering at 7  $\frac{1}{4}$  o'clock grieved, and mourned by all who knew her amiable & Excellent worth. but by none more lamented than her bosom friend & companion who is Frances P Clendenin who faithfully watched her through all her sickness, and who if I may hazard in this world of religious Bigotry & deceit. My sentiments will be again united with her in Heavenly friendship for eternity. A God grant to enable us so to live that we may be calmly resigned to die and may my latter end be that of the righteous man and having no more cause to regret the past than her whose soul has this morning winged away its flight from friends & companion to the bosom of her God!
